7. New findings of the dissertation:

First, the dissertation formulates the central concept of the research topic and establishes the dissertation's theoretical framework, including the core contents of political theory training and professional development for commune-level officials in Khanh Hoa province.

Political theory training and professional development for commune-level officials in Khanh Hoa Province is the totality of organized and planned activities carried out by local management actors (party committees, authorities, and training institutions). The aim is to equip, update, and improve the system of theoretical knowledge regarding Marxism-Leninism, Ho Chi Minh Thought, and the Party's guidelines and policies, as well as State laws, for commune-level officials in Khanh Hoa Province. Through this process, it seeks to standardize leadership capacity, political steadfastness, and practical application skills, thereby meeting the requirements of political tasks and the distinctive socio-economic development needs of Khanh Hoa Province.

Second, the dissertation draws a number of lessons from the practical experience of political theory training and professional development for commune-level officials in Khanh Hoa province. Among these, a new lesson is the need to strengthen close coordination between local party committees and training institutions, including the Provincial Political School and commune-level political centers, in renewing training contents and programs in a way that closely links theory with the resolution of practical issues arising at the grassroots level under the province's specific conditions.

Third, the dissertation proposes new solutions for strengthening political theory training and professional development for commune-level officials in Khanh Hoa province in the coming period. These include renewing training contents and programs in a practical direction closely aligned with the requirements of the digital transformation context; linking training and professional development with the planning and use of commune-level officials in Khanh Hoa province; and at the same time establishing specific mechanisms for attracting, incentivizing, and improving the quality of lecturers and rapporteurs responsible for political theory training and professional development for commune-level officials so as to meet the demands of the new situation.
