7. New conclusions of the dissertation:

Firstly, the thesis builds a theoretical framework on the dialectical relationship between traditional cultural values and Vietnamese human standards, which clarifies that traditional cultural values are not only a spiritual resource but also an endogenous basis that plays a role in shaping and creating Vietnamese human standards in the new context.

Secondly, the thesis evaluates the application of traditional cultural values in building Vietnamese human standards today in three unified aspects: subject of application, content of application and method of application.

From a practical survey, the thesis identifies new issues that are being raised in the application of traditional cultural values in building Vietnamese human standards, especially the conflicts that arise between preserving traditional cultural values and the requirements for integration, digital transformation, and social structural change.

Thirdly, the thesis predicts the multidimensional impacts of domestic and international factors on the application of traditional cultural values, thereby identifying "bottlenecks" that need to be removed and areas that can be exploited in the coming period. Based on the Party's guiding viewpoint and the State's policies on cultural and human development, the thesis proposes a synchronous solution system with a new point being the close connection between cognitive solutions, cultural and human development, the dissertation proposes a comprehensive set of solutions with the novelty of closely linking solutions regarding awareness, institutions, subjects, and methods of application, aiming to enhance the effectiveness of applying traditional cultural values in building the standards of the Vietnamese person in the coming period.
