7. New conclusions of the thesis:

Concept: Innovation in the leadership methods of provincial-level Party committees in the Red River Delta toward the Vietnam Farmers' Union refers to the process by which these Party committees reform specific aspects of their leadership methods over the organization and activities of the Vietnam Farmers' Union in a more effective, progressive, and responsive manner, thereby enabling the Union to successfully accomplish its political missions under new conditions.

Breakthrough solutions: The dissertation proposes two breakthrough solutions to further innovate the leadership methods of provincial-level Party committees toward the Vietnam Farmers' Union. First, it recommends reforming the process of formulating and implementing Party resolutions in an open and participatory manner, ensuring the substantive involvement of the Vietnam Farmers' Union throughout the stages of policy formulation, consultation, and implementation oversight. Second, it proposes innovating leadership style by improving the working regulations of provincial-level Party committees in the context of restructuring the political system, in line with the new regulations of the Communist Party of Vietnam, the National Assembly, and the organizational model of the Vietnam Fatherland Front. These solutions provide valuable policy references and demonstrate strong practical applicability at the local level.
